

Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT)

In CBT, thoughts arise out of perceptions, experiences, opinions, etc. about the situation a person finds themselves in. Those thoughts are not facts. Thoughts cause emotions and feelings to arise both positive and negative ones. The emotions and feelings causes us to make a choice in how we would like to behave. Our chosen behavior will influence and change the situation we are in and the process starts over again.